

Press Release

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

CONTACT:

Joe Lombardo, President
Community Publishing Services, LLC
8615 Melwood Road
Bethesda, MD 20817
Joe@FamilyTimes.com
(301) 365 – 5302
<http://www.FamilyTimes.com>

DATE: February 15, 2004

HEADLINE: FamilyTimes.com launches an online journaling service for families .

BODY:

FamilyTimes.com, a site dedicated to helping families create, share and record great family times, has announced the launch of a new online journaling service designed to help families share and record their lives. The service is a twist on the self publishing trend known as blogging and is tailored to the needs of families wishing to build a legacy.

The journals are open to the public making it easy for friends and family to read and contribute. Members wishing to maintain anonymity can choose to use a pen name. To help members document their lives and preserve their history, the service includes photo, recipe and free form journal entry templates.

M.E. Lombardo, one of the founders of FamilyTimes.com says “We hope that use of this tool will empower people from all walks of life, giving them a means to impart their wisdom for present and future members of their families.”

FamilyTimes.com’s online journaling service is powered by Drupal, an open-source application server that is being used heavily in the blogging community. Drupal was selected for its comprehensive set of community publishing tools.

Produced by Community Publishing Services, LLC, specialists in creating collaborative online services, FamilyTimes.com also offers printable short stories, online games, and a catalog of toys, books and tools for families.